Who Must Have A Mining License? See 15 AAC 65.010

A person engaged in one or more of the following activities in the state is in the business of mining and shall obtain a mining license: (See 15AAC 65.020(b) for exceptions).

- (1) a person owning and operating a mining property;
- (2) a person owning a mining property and receiving lease or royalty payments based on production from the property;
- (3) a person leasing a mining property from another person and operating the property;
- (4) a person possessing a mineral interest, whether an economic or a production interest, in a producing property, including royalty, working or operating interests, net profits, overriding royalties, carried interests, and production payments;
- (5) a person who is temporarily exempt from taxation under AS 43.65.010(a). Note: this exemption does not apply to sand and gravel mining operations.

The following persons are not in the business of mining and are not required to obtain a mining license:

- (1) a person whose mining activities are restricted to the holding of property for exploration to locate and delineate mineral deposits or for future development;
- (2) a person who holds mineral interests described in (a)(4) of this section in undeveloped and non-producing properties;
- (3) a person whose sole mining activity in the state consists of extracting sand, gravel, rock, or fill material from federal, state, or municipal land, if the material is to be used exclusively by that person for public construction projects or for personal use, and is not held for resale.

A mining license must be obtained for each mining operation conducted in this state. A person owning several mining properties that constitute a single mining operation may apply for one license.

Under AS 43.65.030, application for renewal of a mining license shall be made before May 1 of each year.
